Meditations In An Emergency Frank

I'll be back, I'll re-emerge, defeated, from the valley; you don't want me to go where you go, so I go where you don't want me to. It's only afternoon, there's a lot ahead. There won't be any mail downstairs. Turning, I spit in the lock and the knob turns. From Meditations in an Emergency by Frank O'Hara. Copyright © 1957 by Frank O'Hara.

If you’re a Mad Men fan, you may have come across a Frank O’Hara reference in the opening episode of season 2. The main character, Don Draper, is the falling man of our time, the man who is defined by products, the man whose identity is uncertain, the man who is anxious about his standing in the world. Sitting at a bar, Draper notices a guy reading the O’Hara poetry collection Meditations in an Emergency (which includes the poem by the same name).

MEDITATIONS IN AN EMERGENCY contains 30 poems, short to medium in length. Thirteen are one-pagers, twelve are two pages, five are three. Some of the poems are opaque. An exuberant talker, O'Hara on occasion launches into an erudition spill, and if the subject he chooses is of limited interest the resulting poem may not speak to many readers, especially those of us not thoroughly tutored in his ways and means.
